HIKE

This Bighorn Basin landmark is composed of limestone, dolomite, and ordovician. It slid off of the Beartooth formation with a 2° slope travelling at 25 mph, and crossed 1,300 sq. miles. Take a chance on this journey and travel at dusk or dawn for full moon viewing and sunrise views. A Wildflower Identification Guide, Bear Spray, plenty of water, and a light jacket make this hike comfortable and educational. This feature is one of the few recognizable features from the maps brought back by Lewis & Clark on their expedition. The mountain was originally names by the Crow Indians who thought it looked like a buffalo heart. This Mountain is also known for it refugee camp during World War II.

LIFE CAN BE STILL

JOHNNY SEYFANG

At the end of the world
I want us
I want silence
And I want a setting sun

I want to have each other
One last time
To lock eyes and true peace
A few hours of nothing
To remind us that life can be still

I want silence
I want to sit and listen
Close my eyes and truly listen
To the echoes of absolutely nothing
To remind me that life can be still

I want a setting sun
To show me the peace of my youth
I want blending colors of orange and red
Something for you to get lost in
To remind you that life can be still
